

Promotion of young scientists

Travel grants for young scientists are an important part of our scientific society. They enable young talents to participate in conferences and training events, promote the exchange of ideas and the establishment of networks, and thus contribute to the further development of our field. These grants not only strengthen our community, but also the future potential of cytometry.

The DGfZ actively supports young scientists in their participation in cytometry conferences by providing individual funding for their travel activities (travel expenses, accommodation and conference fees) both nationally and internationally.

The society also welcomes applications for the organisation of and participation in education and networking activities and for inviting speakers to give public lectures in Germany in the field of cytometry.
